Buddhi Weragoda
Devops Lead
WOGAA, Govtech

To whom it may concern,

I have known Daniel Zhou from his DevOps internship with our team since November 2023.

Daniel demonstrated a solid understanding and proficiency in AWS, Terraform and GitLab CI/CD. He is an agile and driven learner that constantly explore toolsets to transform our practices. Exceptionally, he seeks not only to master the toolset, but to understand the driving force behind it. This empowered him to present persuasive and pragmatic arguments for enhancing our existing tech stack.

What distinguishes Daniel is his remarkable talent to architect elegant solutions that often transcend our initial perspectives. He's a natural problem solver with astute system design thinking. He delivers impactful presentations during our discussions, showcasing his deep empathy and thoughtful consideration for all members involved.

Daniel exhibits boldness and confidence in his work, unafraid to spearhead transformative initiatives within our organization even as an intern. His proactivity constantly drives significant improvements to our operational efficiency every sprint.

Daniel exhibits strong networking and communication skills, cherishing connections with both coworkers and interns alike, across cross-functional teams. He actively organizes teams for hackathons and contributes to the Intern Engagement Committee.

In WOGAA, our mission is to improve government services with data. Daniel truly embodies this with his ability to network, empathize, and advocate for constant improvements. If you're seeking a capable and visionary tech leader that can lead transformative initiatives within your organization, I will recommend Daniel to you.

Should you have any further questions on his achievements, do not hesitate to email me.

Sincerely,

Buddhi
